PINNY LORE FOUND IN DISTRICT NET

Ichthyologists Wise to the Ictalurina Furcatus.

ALSO THE 'LONG-NOSED DARTER'

By High-sounding Latin Names, Ninety-three Distinct Species of Fishes Are Found in Waters of, In, or by District—Thanks Due the National Museum Sharps.

To the fishermen of the District it may be interesting to know that ninety-three distinct species of fishes from the waters of the District are now listed by the division of fishes, United States National Museum. Several of these species have been recognized only recently as belonging to the local fauna. The agents of the Bureau of Fisheries have introduced some, while others, overlooked in the original investigations, are enumerated in a recent pamphlet by H. A. Bean and Alfred C. Weed, of the division of fishes, National Museum, entitled "Recent Additions to the Fish Fauna of the District of Columbia."

Step Up, Ichthyologists.

All the fishy specimens are known to ichthyologists by names quite unfamiliar to the average fisherman. The Mississippi cat, a large number of which are now taken from the waters of the District, known in the West as the big cat, is scientifically termed Ictalurina furcatus, while the Latin name for the familiar pike-perch is stizostedion vitreum. It may be mentioned that this fish is also found in great quantities in the Susquehanna River, where it is known as salmon, although it belongs to an entirely different family from the real salmon.

In making biological surveys, the faunal area in which the District is situated is considered as extending in all directions within a radius of twenty miles, and therefore, the waters of the District are regarded as extending over this amount of territory, and fish are taken from any point within these bounds, although they include more territory than is actually in the District. The best known and most numerous family of District fishes is the cyprinidae, which includes the minnows and carp-like fishes. This other families found here with numerous species include catfish, shad, herring, bass, and sunfish.

Ever Caught One?

An interesting species found in the Potomac, the Tidal Basin, and the lower portion of the Eastern Branch, is the copper-colored bream, a member of the sunfish family. It is believed that this species is a native rather than an introduced one, as it is an inhabitant of the deeper waters, where it might readily be overlooked by most collectors. In the Northwest Branch, about one mile above Hyattsville, many specimens have been found of the Holesoma longimanus, a small fish commonly known as the long-nosed darter. This fish was previously known only in the headwaters of the James River in Virginia.

Cabin John Run is now proving a great breeding ground for the silver minnow, known to very few of the District anglers as one of the best baits obtainable. It is believed that this species was introduced from the Ohio River drainage. A large number have been taken from the Chesapeake and Ohio canal for scientific purposes by means of a 30-foot bag seine. All the fish were unusually silvery in color and were regarded as fine specimens.

A Tip to Anglers.

Numerous species of the catfish family are found within the limits of the District survey. They include the blue cat, channel cat, bullhead, horned pout, stone cat, mad tom, and the Mississippi cat. The list under the heads of the various families is far too long to be given in full, but if any Washington fisherman has had the usual luck of anglers who return home with empty creels, he need only consult the publications of the Bureau of Fisheries or the division of fishes in the National Museum for evidence that the fishes were really there, and that it was simply luck against him.

OCOQUAN LIKELY SITE.

Commissioners Select Location for Proposed Garbage Plant.

The Commissioners are contemplating the location of the proposed garbage-reducing plant at Ocoquan, Va. There is an 1,800-foot water front at Ocoquan, which affords ample room for such buildings as would be necessary. The Commissioners have included an item in the estimates for the fiscal year for a preliminary survey of the proposition. Washington has 48,000 tons of garbage annually, according to data which has been compiled by District officials. About 1,000 tons of this amount is grease, and after being reduced, can be sold for $10 a ton. The remainder of the garbage is sold for fertilizer at from $5 to $10 a ton.

BOON TO CHRISTIANITY SEEN IN CHINESE CRISIS

Seventh-day Adventist Elder Preaches on Probable Effect of the Present Revolution—Missionary Work Described.

"The present crisis in China can only tend to the furtherance of the Christian religion. It is impossible for China to go backward. With its 450,000,000 of population, with the people more industrious than almost any on earth, all that China needs is to have an opportunity and it will become a mighty factor among the nations of the present age," said Elder L. H. Evans, of Shanghai, yesterday. Elder Evans is third vice president of the General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists in charge of the Asiatic division, which includes China, Japan, Korea, Malay Peninsula, and the East Indies. He spoke at the regular "Sabbath services" of the Seventh-day Adventist church in Takoma Park, and will return to China at the close of the fall council. In his sermon he spoke freely of the effect that the present Chinese revolution would have upon Christian missions in China. He said, in part: "The advance of our missionary work in China has been most encouraging. In no other country in the world, outside

SPECIAL COP LOSES BADGE AND OFFICE

Sheehan's License Revoked by Commissioners.

Charged with having arrested Vivian Fatt, seventeen years of age, of Landover, Md., without due cause, Patrick Sheehan, a special policeman on the Metropolitan police force, has had his commission revoked. The Commissioners, upon the recommendation of Inspector R. H. Boyle and Maj. Richard Sylvester, ordered the commission revoked yesterday.

According to a report by Inspector Boyle, young Fatt was standing on the sidewalk at Stanton Square, in front of the Peabody School, talking to the janitor of the institution, when Sheehan walked up and ordered the boy away. Vivian asked Sheehan to show his badge, and the special policeman is said to have replied, "Boy, you win," and then to have walked away. Sheehan returned later and placed the boy under arrest. He telephoned for the patrol wagon, and told the policeman who responded to the call to place a charge of either disorderly conduct or unlawful assembly against Fatt. When the patrol reached the station house the boy was discharged, the desk sergeant refusing to enter the name on the blotter.
